In an article titled Catalyst Semiconductor Succeeds in Getting Closer to Customers appearing in the Special Advertising Section of the June 13, 2005 issue of the EE Times, the following sentences appeared:

This year, mixed signal and analog products accounted for 6% of the company s $63.5 million revenue, up from 2% of sales the previous year. The remaining sales came from its traditional EEPROM segment. By the end of 2006, mixed signal and analog is expected to reach 25% of sales, said Wiley.

The sentences above should have read as follows:

This year, mixed signal and analog products accounted for 5% of the company s $62.3 million revenue, up from 2% of sales the previous year. The remaining sales came from its traditional EEPROM and Flash products. The intermediate target for our mixed signal and analog products is to reach 25% of sales, said Wiley.
