The combination of Activision Blizzard will result in the largest, most profitable independent publisher of interactive entertainment in the world.

Both Activision and Vivendi shareholders will derive great benefits from this transaction. You get the natural benefits that come from complementary revenue sources, a much more predictable subscription-oriented revenue source that we get from World of Warcraft, combined with the high growth franchises and margin-expanding franchises we have, like Guitar Hero and Call of Duty.

With 9 million subscribers on World of Warcraft, or the tens of millions of people playing Guitar Hero, video games are now transcending the traditional stereotypes and they are now more popular as a form of entertainment to the broadest possible audiences.

Activision Blizzard's products, like Call of Duty, World of Warcraft and Guitar Hero, are more successful, financially and from an audience perspective, than most other entertainment properties, like movies or television.

Soundbites:

Jean-Bernard Lévy

Chairman of the Management Board & Chief Executive Officer, Vivendi

We are announcing today the creation of Activision Blizzard. It combines the great assets and the great talents of Vivendi Games and of Activision.

Edgar Filing: ACTIVISION INC /NY - Form 425

The most exciting thing is that we are already leaders — leaders because of the footprint on all continents, including Asia and Europe, and of course, North America. Leaders with the products and services and leaders with the key talents. So I think it's a great combination for the consumers and for the employees and for the shareholders.

Customers are most important to us because at the end of the day, what we want to do, is to make great games for our consumers. The games industry is the fastest growing segment of entertainment and for Vivendi, it is key to invest in that industry.
