Memorandum

Date      March 1, 2005
To        All Employees Worldwide
From      Brian J. Harker
Subject   New Company Name & Logo

The coming together of DIMON and Standard allows us to build upon each company's tangible strengths and resources, as well as shape the intangible perceptions of who we are and how we are perceived in the market (our brand). Our company name and our logo will clearly be important symbols of those strengths and what we wish to represent. Polls of employees from both companies favored creating a new profile for the new company, with a new culture that both employee groups could migrate into.

We have chosen Alliance One International as the name for the new company. The name was chosen following a thorough review of a lengthy list of possible names provided by the advertising agencies of each company. The name Alliance One corresponded best with the strategic goals of the new company. Alliance One also proved to be the strongest name when tested against other names, including DimonStandard, among employees of both companies.

Alliance describes a company that is professional, financially stable, responsive, innovative and future focused. These are perceptions that will impact our present and future customer base. By adding One to the name, we convey these strengths as unified within one organization.

The logo design of Alliance One follows a similar strategic path and builds on our combined strengths. The A clearly refers to the alliance of the two companies. Indirectly, it says we have the best of both companies and are even better positioned to meet the needs of our customers. The arc through the A is reminiscent of a globe and is purposely open-ended to depict the limitless horizons of the future. The arc through the A is balanced over the words Alliance One to signify the partnership we have with our customers. Lastly, the colors were selected based on their ability to reinforce the message and make our branding activities distinctive.

The name Alliance One and its graphic representation are intended to symbolize the customer-focused culture we will create when we merge two great competitors to form one great alliance. The creation of our new name and logo is a first step in shaping our new company's brand. We are excited about our future and all the possibility it holds, and hope you are, too.
