Dear Colleagues,

I am pleased to announce that Bunge has signed a definitive agreement to acquire Corn Products, a leading corn wet miller and manufacturer of sweeteners, starches and ingredients used by food and industrial customers. Corn Products has approximately 7,000 employees and operations in 15 countries across North and South America, Africa and Asia.

When finalized, the combination of Bunge and Corn Products will make us a true global leader in the corn value chain, with dry and wet milling operations and an array of higher-value products. Overall, we will be a stronger and more integrated agribusiness and food company, serving more customers in more countries with more products. Importantly, we will also have an improved platform on which to grow our entire business.

One of Bunge's four strategic pillars is to expand into new value chains that complement our existing operations. Corn wet milling is just such a chain. By leveraging our expertise and operations, we will generate additional value from Corn Products' businesses. At the same time, by integrating the people, products and operations of Corn Products into Bunge, we will be able to do more with our existing businesses.

We see a host of opportunities to:

- Serve common customers in the food processor, brewing, bakery and animal feed markets with a larger product offering;
- Leverage sales forces and distribution channels to increase our presence in important market segments (an existing Bunge/Corn Products partnership in Brazil has already shown this can work);

- Build our combined presence in North and South America;
- Create opportunities for Bunge to expand in important geographies, such as Mexico, other parts of South America, Pakistan and Africa, where Corn Products has strong positions, and to extend Corn Products operations deeper into India, China and Southeast Asia, where Bunge is well-established;
- Apply Bunge's, logistics and risk management expertise to generate incremental value from Corn Products operations; and
- Build a stronger product development function.

All of these opportunities make this acquisition a transformational step that will enable us to build an even better company.

Additionally, it makes good sense economically. Corn Products has a strong balance sheet and is a solid generator of cash flow. Given that Corn Products shareholders will become Bunge shareholders upon the close of the deal, both Corn Products and Bunge investors will benefit from the long-term potential of the larger company, which, due to its broader product portfolio and greater geographic balance, will have more diverse earnings streams.

So what are the next steps?

We expect the acquisition to close in the fourth quarter of this year. In the meantime, we will set up a team that will study the best way to integrate Corn Products' operations into Bunge. We have done this many times before, on large and small scales, and, as in the past, we will approach all decisions in a studied, fair and transparent manner. Our values of integrity and openness and trust will be at the forefront of our minds. You will be kept apprised of major decisions, and, of course, you can get answers to questions by speaking to your managers or members of the integration team.

This transaction is about growth and as such, we do not anticipate any plant closures as a direct result of this transaction. However, there will likely be some overlap, primarily in administrative areas, which will lead to some staffing adjustments.

It is important to emphasize that the combination of Bunge and Corn Products is an opportunity to create something even greater than we have today – a stronger company with more opportunities for the enterprise and its employees.

I am confident that we will realize these opportunities. I know I can count on your support, and I thank you as always for your dedication to Bunge.

Best regards,

Alberto Weisser
