Diebold CEO says confident of gaining enough support for Wincor takeover

By Alexander Huebner and Anneli Palmen

21 March 2016

Reuters

U.S. ATM maker Diebold (DBD.N) is optimistic it will still gain the required level of support for its planned $1.8 billion takeover of German rival Wincor Nixdorf (WING.DE), its CEO told Reuters.

Diebold needs 75 percent of Wincor Nixdorf shareholders to tender their shares by March 22 for the cash and shares deal to succeed but by Monday the acceptance level stood at only 39.6 percent, Wincor said.

We knew that reaching the finish line of the proposed merger was going to be close, but the potential benefits have made it worth pursuing, and the investors and customers we've met are very supportive, Diebold CEO Andy Mattes said in a statement to Reuters.

Mattes said that he remains optimistic that more than 75 percent of the shares would be tendered, but confirmed that the deal would not be changed.

The deadline to change the offer in any way has now passed, so if we do not reach the 75 percent tender threshold by the end of the day on the 22nd, the deal will not happen, he said.

Diebold's Wincor Nixdorf Bid Will Be Close, CEO Mattes Says

By Stefan Nicola

22 March 2016

Bloomberg

Diebold Inc.'s bid to buy Wincor Nixdorf AG to create the biggest maker of cash machines and systems hinges on more of its German rival's shareholders accepting the offer in the coming hours.

Wincor shareholders controlling about 48 percent of the share capital had agreed to the offer as of 2 p.m. CET on March 22, Diebold said. That's still short of the minimum threshold of about 67.6 percent, which the North Canton, Ohio-based company needs to accumulate by the deadline at midnight Central European Time.

We knew that reaching the finish line of the proposed merger was going to be close, but the potential benefits have made it worth pursuing, and the investors and customers we've met are very supportive, Diebold Chief Executive Officer Andreas Mattes said in an e-mailed statement Tuesday. Diebold on Nov. 23 offered cash and stock valuing its rival at 54.32 euros a share, or 40 percent higher than Wincor's close Oct. 16, the day before the companies said they were in talks. The offer at the time was valued at about 1.8 billion euros ($2 billion). Wincor's boards had recommended the bid as appropriate and fair.

Wincor can't say whether the deal will succeed or not, said Andreas Bruck, a company spokesman. While the offer has been received positively, it's now up to shareholders to decide, he said by phone.

Buying Paderborn-based Wincor would give Diebold, with about 16,000 employees, a bigger presence in Europe. Wincor builds hardware and software, including ATMs and cash registers, for banks and retailers. The company used to be owned by engineering giant Siemens AG before it was sold to private-equity investors in 1999. It held an initial public offering in 2004 and currently operates in 130 countries with about 9,000 employees.

With assistance from Aaron Kirchfeld.
